Internship is a paid internship that combines hands on training alongside professional Horticultural staff as well as educational classes. The Intern and Apprentice Records (1970-2004) document the hiring process for the Hunnewell Horticultural Internship Program from 1970 to 2004.

Horticultural Training Program

An equally important part of our educational programs is training young adults in the practical, hands-on techniques of horticultural maintenance, greenhouse and nursery operations, and the importance of accurate record keeping. This rigorous internship program, now over 35 years old, incorporates training in woody plant identification, pruning, pest management, and propagation, along with weekly lectures in botany and field trips to private estates and botanical gardens. Approximately 15 young adults from around the world are selected from a competitive pool of applicants to take classes and to work on the Arboretum grounds from April through December.

Botanical gardens have an important role to play in guiding the direction of horticultural education and environmental management especially in the face of the pressures imposed by the ever-expanding human population. Indeed, former interns who were trained through this program are now in positions of prominence and influence in gardens across the country, including here at the Arnold Arboretum. The people that we train at the Arnold Arboretum are every bit as important a resource as the plants we cultivate.
