Historical Note

Jack Doherty of the Jamaica Plain Citizen, Mayor Raymond Flynn, and Representative John McDonough at Arbor Day Festival, 1985. Photographer K. Nixon

The Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University offers public events and education programs throughout the year to promote “understanding and appreciation of plant life in its full complexity.” These activities are designed for a range of audiences, from children to adults and novices to experts.

The Arboretum celebrated Arbor Day every April from 1979-1988, and occasionally since then, to highlight the importance of conservation and as an opportunity to educate the public about its mission. Arbor Day at the Arboretum emphasized protecting the environment and celebrating nature. Tree planting was often the ‘main event’ at the Arbor Day Festival which also event also featured games and other activities.

The Arnold Arboretum has hosted and continues to host a number of open houses for students, staff, faculty, and the general public. These events inform guests about the Arboretum, its mission, goals, and programs. They have been held in the Hunnewell Administration Building and the Charles Stratton Dana Greenhouses on the Arboretum grounds, the Case Estates in Weston, Massachusetts, and the Harvard University Herbaria in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Open houses showcase current projects and exhibit what goes on ‘behind-the-scenes’ at the institution. In December, 1987 the Arboretum hosted the Winter Festival of Wood, open to the public, the festival featured a variety of winter customs including the Yule Log and tree lighting. The event also included dance, story, and song as well as wassail, a drink of hot spiced cider and toasted apples. The word wassail comes from the Anglo-Saxon words “wes hal,” which means “very good health.” The festival was a way for the Arboretum to wish “all its neighbors, ‘Good Health and a Happy New Year’” (from the Records of Arnold Arboretum Special Events, 1962-)

Arboretum staff member Maurice Sheehan helps plant a tree during Arbor Day, 1990.

Family activities at the Arboretum include tree planting, crafts, poetry contests, and family walking adventures to introduce the world of horticulture to young people. The Arboretum also offers nature programs with a focus on plant science to elementary and preschool children and their teachers. Together, these public programs support the institution’s mission of educating the community about the diversity and complexity of plant life.

Scope and Content

This collection contains a variety of materials including correspondence, flyers, photographs, negatives, memos, articles, and more related to special events held by the Arnold Arboretum. This includes Arbor Day events and open houses. The collection spans 1962-2008. Further accruals are expected.

Note: When contacted in 2012 by the Arboretum Archive staff to ask for permission to use his image in the finding aid, Amitai Lipton not only agreed, but generously supplied this additional information:

I was at the Arnold Arboretum as part of a poetry contest for area fourth-graders. We were asked to write Arbor Day-themed poems, and a handful of poems (eight or so), were selected as winners. My haiku was among the winners, and the eight of us recited our poems at the Arboretum. I believe the contest was sponsored by the Boston Globe, but I'm not sure.

My poem was:

Once there was a tree /
With many leaves /

And now it is my desk
