Title: Jackson Thornton Dawson (1841-1916), Papers 1861-2007.

Date(s): 1874-1911

Creator: Jackson Thornton Dawson (1841-1916)

Quantity: 2 linear feet

Language of material: English

Abstract: Jackson Thornton Dawson (1841-1916) was the first Propagator of the Arnold Arboretum. Dawson ran the greenhouse and was well-known for his incredible green thumb and the award-winning rose hybrids he grew. This collection includes Dawson's writings, his Civil War-era letters, family photos, obituaries and other writings about Dawson, and some interesting ephemera including the medals he won and his Bible, complete with bullet hole from the Civil War.

Notes: Access to Finding Aid record in HOLLIS.

Preferred Citation: Jackson Thornton Dawson papers. Archives of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University.

Processing Information

Processed initially by Mary Harrison, Library Volunteer, in October 1995. Reorganized and described by DJ Schuldt, Simmons University SLIS graduate student, Fall 2022.

Acquisition Information

Provenance:

This collection was transferred from the Arnold Arboretum's departmental holdings to the Arboretum's Archives in 1984 when the Archive was created.

Biographical Note

Jackson Thornton Dawson (1841-1916), the first plant propagator and superintendent of the Arnold Arboretum, served 43 years and played a significant role in the growth of the Arboretum as a world-class institution. During these years he raised 450,718 plants and distributed 47,993 packets of seed throughout the world. He was known for his legendary skill at the propagation of plants, as the ultimate “green thumb.”

In his Annual Report for 1917, Charles Sprague Sargent memorialized Dawson as having ... a remarkable knowledge of plants and unequalled skill in their propagation. A large part of the plants now growing in the Arboretum were raised by him from seeds, and in the early days of the arboretum he raised here thousands of plants for the Harvard Botanic Garden at Cambridge. All the Chinese and Japanese plants introduced by the Arboretum were raised by him, and the fact that in the last sixteen years of his life he raised seedlings of 3367 numbers of American hawthorns shows his industry. Dawson produced here several important hybrid roses, and with more time at his disposal, he might have become one of the world’s great plant breeders. Dawson brought to the Arboretum industry, intelligence, imagination, and entire devotion, and much of its success is due to his labors.

As a child, Dawson lived with an uncle who was a nurseryman in Andover, Massachusetts, and had a fascination with plants from an early age. Although his formal education ended with commercial school, Dawson, a Civil War veteran, would become an active member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, serving on committees, giving lectures and publishing papers. In 1911 he was awarded the Society’s prestigious prize for cultivation. His stature was such that in 1927 Massachusetts Horticultural Society established the Jackson Dawson Memorial Medal for “skill in the science and practice of hybridization and propagation of hardy woody plants.”

For further biographical information, see “Mr. Dawson, Plantsman” by Sheila Connor Geary and B. June Hutchinson, Arnoldia vol. 40 no. 2 (1980): 51-75.

Scope and Content

The Jackson Dawson papers range from 1861-2007 and include correspondence, annual reports, lists of hybridized plants, notes, diary and ledger entries, photographs, medals, a Bible, and books. There is also a history of Eastern Nurseries Inc, which was incorporated by Dawson's son and managed by his wife. Additional biographical material and correspondence was researched and later added in the 1980s and again in the 2010s.

Related Collection

Archives IV C 1.1 - Early Plant Accessions, 1872–1899: This collection contains the earliest versions of the Arnold Arboretum's plant record system that includes a standardized accession number assigned to every plant on the grounds for use in tracking its name and origin. These records were created between 1873 and 1899 principally by Jackson Thornton Dawson during his Arboretum career as plant propagator from 1873 – 1916.
